Art Therapy for kids with special needs

Within the scope of volunteer activity, inclusive education specialist Tako Jikia visited the Rukhi multifunctional center, where she had children with special needs of #3 public school as guests.

They underwent art therapy, the purpose of which is to improve communication and self-expression. Art therapy is non-verbal communication to express one's thoughts and emotions. Such activities provide an opportunity to develop effective communication skills.

Services for children with disabilities are insufficient. In many regions and municipalities, such services do not exist at all. In response, CHCA is beginning to advocate in this direction.
